Barred from the archives of Scotland Yard, there is a historic precedent for the rescue of Mrs. Evokiya Petrov, cipher expert in the Russian embassy in Australia, from the Soviet secret police who were taking her back to Moscow.

On Oct. 23, 1936, Scotland Yard men rapp'd on the front door of the Chinese imperial legation in London.

They demanded the immediate release of a young Chinese who had been a prisoner there for 12 days. They were ready to take him by force. Confronted by this threat, backed up by a note from the foreign office, the legation surrendered its prisoner.

The rescued man was Sun Yat-sen, father of the Chinese revolution, revered in his own country as George Washington is in the United States.

It was Sun, living in exile, who organized the revolution that resulted in the overthrow of the imperial Manchurian dynasty in China in 1912. He organized the structure of the present republic.

Sun, a poor farmer, was born in 1867. He went to Britain Hong Kong to attend a medical school, and in 1894 became its first graduate.

In Hong Kong Sun formed a life

Sun became a revolutionary immediately after leaving school. The first plot in which he took part failed. Almost alone among the conspirators, Sun escaped. The rest were executed.

Sun became an exile. He came to the United States, and sailed from New York for Great Britain in September, 1896.

Sun arrived in London on Oct. 1, 1896, as the guest of Sir James Cantile. On Oct. 11 he was kidnapped by Chinese agents and dragged into the diplomatically untouchable Chinese legation where he was kept a close prisoner.

At that time there was a modest price of $1,000 on his head. The legation wanted to spirit him back to China to be executed.

Sun won the sympathy of a British servant in the legation. He wrote a note to Cantile, appealing for help, and the servant delivered it.

Cantile got a London newspaper to publish the story. By that means, Cantile got the British government interested.

The Marquis of Salisbury, who was both Prime Minister and foreign secretary, wrote a note to the legation demanding Sun's release and backed it up by the threat of forcible action.

The action became historic. It challenged the privileges of diplomats in their own premises, traditionally regarded as the soil of their own countries. Its legality is still debated.

But Sun lived. Before he became the first president of the Chinese republic the price on his head had risen to $500,000.

Star Rita Hayworth In Fight For Possession Of Her Daughters

NEW YORK (AP) — Glamorous Rita Hayworth sped north from Miami today to fight for possession of the two daughters she is charged with neglecting while vacationing with her fourth husband, Dick Haymes.

The red haired actress and Haymes checked out of Miami's fashionable Roney Plaza Hotel Friday at about the same time the two children were being placed in technical custody of a sheriff in suburban White Plains.

The couple, ending a two-week vacation of sun bathing and fishing, headed north in a borrowed Jaguar sports car. They were expected to arrive at their hotel here early today to confer with Rita's attorney, Bartley Crum.

Children's Court Judge George W. Smyth signed the order in White Plains placing the children in protective custody. He said they were found playing in an antique shop surrounded by motels and tourist homes.

Mrs. Dorothy Chambers, operator of the shop, said she was the children's governess. She said she had cared for the children for long time and had taken them to White Plains from New York after their mother and stepfather left for the Florida vacation.

The children, Rebecca, 9, and Yasmine, 4, were taken from the custody of their actress mother on complaint of the Westchester County Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. The society said the two little girls were being "neglected and mistreated."

Rebecca is the daughter of Orson Welles, Rita's second husband; and Yasmine is the daughter of Prince Aly Khan and granddaughter of the Aga Khan, one of the world's richest men.

This Week's Balance Sheet In The Hot And Cold War

By CHARLES M. McCANN
United Press Staff Correspondent

This week's balance between the good and bad news in the hot and cold war:

THE GOOD

1. Secretary of State John Foster Dulles left for the Geneva conference assured of bipartisan support in Congress for a firm stand against further Communist aggression in Southeast Asia and against any attempt by the Communists to force recognition of Red China as the price of peace. Hope of the Allied nations for any agreement with the Reds was not high. But at least the chips will be down.

2. Australian police rescued Mrs. Evokiya Petrov, code expert in the Soviet embassy in Canberra, from secret police agents who were flying her to Moscow. Her husband, Vladimir Petrov, chief Soviet spy planes air trip over India. His wife was not permitted to take part in preliminary negotiations on A-bomb and H-bomb control. United States Chief Delegate Henry Cabot Lodge Jr., called the stand of Soviet Delegate Andrei Y. Vishinsky "a thinly veiled threat to torpedo the peace."

3. India's Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru announced he would not permit American Air Force planes to fly over India. His attitude will force the planes to make wide, dangerous detours. It was the latest move in Nehru's "neutrality" policy which the West feels aids the Communists.

4. British left wing labor leader Aneurin Bevan started getting strong support from labor unions against the rearming of Germany. In a new development of his opposition to British cooperation with the United States, Bevan charged that this country wants the Geneva conference to be a "carefully arranged failure."

5. The president is a native of Henry County who has taught in Owen, Trimble, Breckinridge, Olan, Lawrence and Harlan counties a total of 25 years. He has been principal of Benham High School since 1945 and will become dean of Union College, Barbourville, June 1.

Other new officers are Carlos Oakley, superintendent of Union County schools, first vice president; and Elizabeth Dennis, Lexington, second vice president.

Mrs. Edna Lindie, Henderson, and Mrs. Sarah T. Mitchell, Covington, were nominated for election on the State Teachers Retirement System. The winner in mail balloting, will succeed Mary Maguire, Lexington, to serve a four year term.

Nehru Proposes More Haggling Faced Today By Five Point Plan McCarthy Senate Investigators To End War

NEW DELHI, India, Apr. 24 (AP) — Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru proposed today a five-point plan to end the Indochina War by direct negotiations between the Communists, France and the three Associated States.

Nehru urged the United States, Britain, Russia, and Red China to make a "solemn agreement" not to intervene with troops or war materials while the negotiations are in progress.

The Prime Minister, who two days ago refused to permit U.S. planes to fly over India with reinforcements for Dien Bien Phu, proposed that the Geneva conference give top priority to consideration of a cease-fire in Indochina.

Nehru's formula, given in a statement to India's lower house of parliament, contained the following points:

1. "A climate of peace for negotiations has to be promoted and the atmosphere of threats that prevails ought to be dispelled. Nehru said India appeals to all concerned to 'refrain from stepping up the tempo of the war.'"

2. "The item of a cease-fire should be given priority on the Indochina conference agenda." On the combatant nations should take part in cease-fire arrangements.

3. "The conference should decide to proclaim that the essential solution to the conflict is the complete independence of Indochina, and the termination of French sovereignty should be placed beyond all doubt as an unequivocal commitment by the government of France."

4. "The conference should initiate negotiations between the parties directly and principally concerned and should give them all possible assistance."

5. "A solemn agreement of non-intervention, denying aid direct or indirect with troops or war materials to the combatants for purposes to which the United States, Soviet Union, United Kingdom and China shall be the primary parties should be brought about by the conference."

Nehru added that the United Nations should be informed of the progress of this conference.

DeWeese Is Defeated By John Boyd For KEA Presidency

LOUISVILLE (AP) — Dr. John Boyd, Benham, last night became the first person from a private college to be elected president of the Kentucky Education Association.

The 44 year old educator defeated James B. DeWeese, superintendent of Graves County schools, in secret balloting by the 136-member delegate assembly.

The KEA declined to make the vote tabulation public.

Boyd succeeds Dr. Lyman W. Gieger, Lexington, who served as president the past two years and was the first person to be elected to two successive terms as KEA president.

A typical example came late Friday in the testimony of former PFC Edward M. Gaither, now a construction worker in Philadelphia.

Gaither openly paraded his hostility toward the defendant as he testified that he was beaten, jailed for seven months and confronted by a mock firing squad after discussing his escape plans with Dickinson.

Ignoring the high ranking officers in the court, Gaither glared across the narrow courtroom and challenged, "Don't you like it?" Dickinson, usually impassive, did not respond. But his jaw muscles twitched nervously.

Gaither never offered any proof that Dickinson told the Communists of his escape plans. But he thought it was significant that, within 48 hours after his talk with Dickinson, the Chinese guards seized his secret store of supplies and threw him in jail.

NAME AND TRADE

and HERBERT FOSTER
United Press Staff Correspondents

WASHINGTON, (AP) — Senate investigators faced more haggling today over whether monitored telephone conversations between Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy and the Army will be aired publicly in hearings on their row.

Acting Chairman Karl E. Mundt, R-S.D. of the Senate investigating Subcommittee said McCarthy gave only "fuzzy consent" to make public what he said to Pentagon officials in calls he did not know were being written down.

Mundt said he may call a secret meeting of the subcommittee and the six participants in the bitter Army-McCarthy fight next week to try to hammer out a formula for getting the texts of the calls into the public record. He said it would require some negotiating.

But he declared the issue would not delay "one iota" the subcommittee's televised hearings into the drama-packed dispute. The hearings will resume Monday with further cross examination of Army Secretary Robert T. Stevens on his charges that McCarthy and subcommittee counsel Roy M. Cohn used heavy pressure to obtain favored treatment for a drafted aide, Pvt. G. David Schine.

Subcommittee members found themselves up in the air over a motion adopted unanimously after two hour wrangle Friday to subpoena the Army's stenographic transcripts of calls "relevant" to the dispute.

"Mundt and some other members of the subcommittee still must decide whether the transcripts will be placed in the public record. Others thought that McCarthy had agreed to make the conversations public."

The controversy over the monitored calls erupted when the Army tried to introduce the text of a last Nov. 7 recording Schine.

Stevens testified that McCarthy told him in the conversation that Cohn thought Schine, who had just been drafted, "ought to be a general." McCarthy himself, Stevens said, suggested that Schine be given a few weekends off "perhaps to take care of his girl friends."

McCarthy denied to reporters later that he and Stevens "even remotely discussed Dave's social life." He said the weekends were for subcommittee work.

McCarthy's objection blocked, at least until the hearings resume, the introduction of the Nov. 7 transcript.

Bitterness Shows Up In Dickinson Trial

WASHINGTON (AP) — Old hates born in a Communist prison camp nearly two years ago are flaring anew in the court martial of Cpl. Edward S. Dickinson on charges of being a collaborator and informer.

The bitterness shows up in the testimony of some former fellow prisoners who feel that the round shouldered little mountaineer from Cracker Neck, Va., curried favor with the Communists in Korea by spying and telling of their escape plans.

A typical example came late Friday in the testimony of former PFC Edward M. Gaither, now a construction worker in Philadelphia.

Gaither openly paraded his hostility toward the defendant as he testified that he was beaten, jailed for seven months and confronted by a mock firing squad after discussing his escape plans with Dickinson.

Ignoring the high ranking officers in the court, Gaither glared across the narrow courtroom and challenged, "Don't you like it?" Dickinson, usually impassive, did not respond. But his jaw muscles twitched nervously.

Gaither never offered any proof that Dickinson told the Communists of his escape plans. But he thought it was significant that, within 48 hours after his talk with Dickinson, the Chinese guards seized his secret store of supplies and threw him in jail.

TODAY'S SPORTS PARADE

NEW YORK, Apr. 24. (AP)—This is the week when the butcher, the baker and even Grandma pick their longshots for next Saturday's Kentucky Derby and it may hearten the members of the "Knock Down the Favorites" club to learn that the popular choices are beaten 82 per cent of the time.

Last year was a case in point as the fabulous Native Dancer, an odds-on favorite, was beaten off by the shooting Dark Star at a juicy $51.80 for your duce. The long shot players still are dreaming of a repeat on the 1913 upsetter, Donerail, who scampered home to the merry tune of $184.90. Nor was Donerail the long outsider that May afternoon just before World War I. Finishing sixth in 1913 was a nag named Lord Marshall which, had he won, would have paid $380 for a two-spot. So let the chalk eaters sneer. As has been proved so often, anything can win this one.

Not all the old pros of the golf world think the par-busting sprouts of today are inferior to the Sarazens and Hagers of the past. One who gives the palm to the current stars is veteran Mike Ford, whose son, Doug, does things the old man never could as one of the tournament trail's big winners.

"The old masters may have been artists," Mike explained, "but these younger stars are scientists." ... hinting that while the equipment may be better, so is the brand of competition.

The bravest men in major league baseball if you are superstitious are Sissy Sisti of the Braves and Ed Pellagrini of the Pittsburgh Pirates. They are the only ones under the big top who wear the number 13.

With a half dozen top distance men shooting for the first four minutes of the British marathon runner Jim Peters has his money bet on Briton Gordon Pirie is running almost 200 miles a week to build up endurance and speed—and predicts that Pirie may even startle the sports world with a 3:55 performance. It will be tough because with the record at 4:01.4, hopeful Mal Whitfield estimates that the 14 seconds alone is comparable to 15 yards.

The Pittsburgh Pirates may be "coming" but their inner defense still doesn't rival the old Athletics. The big 50 cent match is labeled, actually, as a "$24,000" infield, with each of the four some being paid $6,000 a year, which proves that Branch Rickey hasn't lost his financial touch.

Did you hear the one about the two golfers who were all square going to the short 18th tee in a big 50 cent match? The first one said, "I haven't lost my opponent yet, but I'll be the ball turning to the caddy he asked."

"Has my very good friend gone in the trap—or did the ponofang land of the green?"

Any real friends for tennis?

CHAPTER TWENTY-FIVE

THE LITTLE car bumped slowly over the railroad tracks. The wind was colder and Julia drew her cape up about her throat. Pete Marshall lighted a cigaret.

Julia kept silent. She thought about Farrell Rhodes' eyes. The look she had given Sewell Albright. It might be that that would work out; it might be that Sally's foolishness would bring ultimate good to somebody.

Pete was still talking stormily. "By the time that girl comes back the Rhodes woman and her father will both have absolved her. They'll have decided that she went wrong was a little girl, or because her kindergarten teacher didn't understand her, or the wallpaper was the wrong color, or her blonde or her a frolic, half light, probably, and because she sheds a few penitent tears, all is forgiven. Another little kid goes through life as a derelict who his father was, but by the time she's 10 years old she'll have forgotten she ever had him!"

"Just one question pops into my mind," Julia remarked. "That man who absolves him? I can answer that. It's easy. You do."

"I don't even know the guy. He's a heel, of course."

"Even if Sally should reveal his name, how many men would look at him with contempt? Maybe his wife would divorce him, but that's all that would happen to him. Except," she added, "that all the rest of his life he'll have a bad moment whenever he meets Sally."

He reached and patted her wrist. "A crusader, no less! Didn't I tell you that it would be a good thing if this civilization got blasted out of existence? You had arguments against that, Dooley, I like you—and I wish the world were half as good as you want it to be."

She stiffened, drawing her arm away. Something like panic ran hotly along her veins. It mustn't begin again—the dream. She would not let it happen again.

She said formally: "I appreciate your help in this problem, doctor. I'm afraid I would have met a frigid reception in that house if you hadn't gone with me. They might not have let us see Farrell at all."

He said: "You're quite welcome, Miss Taber. Any time you need another fallen sister propped up, just call on P. S. Marshall. When he helped her out of the car he held to her arm for an instant. 'Just one thing, Dooley: don't go along all your life making yourself negligible.'"

She switched away from him and hurried off with a frosty "Good-night, doctor."

It was working. When Ravel saw him again, Ravel the poacher, to whom other women's poses would know. But why wasn't she happy about it?

It was working too well. Pete was growing definitely more attentive, seeking her out ostentatiously—but there was no such thing as being inconspicuous in a hospital. Even the nurses were noticing. The internes grinned at her when she showed up on their list. Why was she unhappy about it, when only a few weeks before she would have glowed with happiness at a kind word from him?

Now she was haunted by the feeling that some kind of apology was due to Pete, that somehow she was turning what was meant to be beautiful into the adversary. She had never before thought of Pete as vulnerable. Always it had been he who dealt the blow, disdained the issue, flicked his eyes past any hurt, always on guard, directly retaining the advantage.

Now here she was a convalescing woman, out after her grandmother's cooly ruthless pattern, as offering up Pete at a kind of sacrifice to Ravel's bandit instinct. Now even her motive was growing a little dim in her mind.

Spring was coming. In the elevator Pete Marshall had said: "Be nice in the country now. Going home for the week-end, Taber?"

"I hope I may. I haven't been since Christmas."

He opened the door for the second floor and looked at her. "If you need a chauffeur, wait down stairs after 5 o'clock."

Julia's hands were slightly uncertain as she put on clean underthings and brushed her hair. Miss Pryor came into the room and unpinned her cap, tossing it on the bureau. She threw herself on her narrow bed and draped her feet over the high iron footrail.

"So you're the lucky one this weekend!" she moaned. "Me—numb to my knees. Look, Taber—what is this? One of those 'nurse finally lands cagey doctor' things? Split out the canary feathers and give."

Miss Staats, who was curled up on the foot of her bed doing things to her rather wide mouth with a finger and thumb, looked up and smiled. "You're ages late, Pryor. Pick yourself out a nice weepy willow tree. He went down for the third time today ago. Huh-huh-huh!"

—not a bubble showing. I said to him, as meek as oatmeal, I said: 'Do I assist you tonight, doctor?' and he gives me a look like I'd crawled out from inside a bad gall bladder and yelps: 'Thank goodness, no!'

"You should have looked at the board," Pryor said. "He's posted off duty tonight, and here sits the Lily Maid of Astoria, and who knows from nothing? Fixing up her face and looking like the kitten that swiped the cream. So we stupidly said up two and two and how do you like your canary, Miss Taber? Fried on both sides, with truffles, no doubt."

"I'm going home," announced Julia soberly. "The first time I've been off since Christmas. Now see if you yokers can make something out of that."

Miss Pryor kicked off her shoes with a groan. "Nine hours on that tile floor and they ruin the slippy after all, so I get the devil about it from old Grampus Staats. I get the picture. A nice technical scene of romance. Here's little Taber, riding along a country road in that cute little jalopy with practically no brakes and a leaky top. And who is this who sits beside our heroine? Ah—none other than old Br'er Wolf himself! No use for women, he craves. In a pig eyes, says I. He'll be telling this trusting maiden the sad story of his blighted from

"Not too blighted," interrupted Staats. "His father was a rich doctor. Old Gus Marshall. He's in some of the books. Pines in nerve surgery or something. He left Br'er Wolf a nice hunk of money, so the rumor goes."

"That ain't the way I heard it. I heard that our little P.S. got heaved out on his ear and ran off and joined the Navy. Now the elevator man says that P.S. is going to chauffeur Taber home."

"Suppose he does?" Julia asked. "He'd do the same for you—or Della Moore."

"But he wouldn't look the same, my pet. Stop putting on an act, Taber. If you've got the guy hooked, more power to your arms, says I."

"How about a nice slug of so-dium amylal for you two?" asked Julia sweetly, jerking up the slipper of her gray skirt. "I think I'll wear a sweater under my jacket. That key looks cold and our house at home is draughty."

"Wear my new green one, Taber. It will look devastating with your eyes. They have a kind of greenish tint in them."

"You might need it, Pryor. It's so pretty—I might get a spot on it."

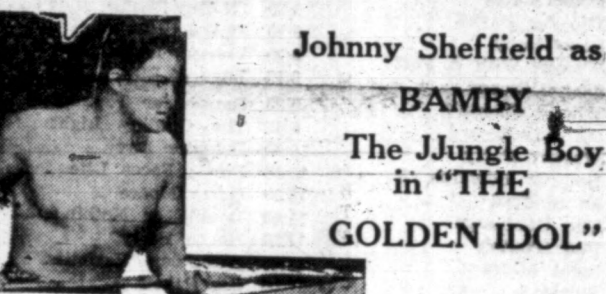

"I won't need it. Give her your green necktie, too, Staatsie. Dress her up for the kill. Listen, gal, if you don't want him, at least soften him up a little."

"No chance," Miss Staats sighed. "That frost goes down to bedrock. You look very nice, daughter. Here, let me—finish up these curls in back, and fasten that gimmick. It's tricky when you can't see it."

They were sweet, they were utterly crazy, and Julia felt a little jerk of bereavement, knowing that soon they would all be scattered, perhaps never to see one another again. Staats was going into the flight service. Pryor, little and blonde and cute, would undoubtedly marry somebody almost instantly. Her own future she did not speculate on. Her mind was too mixed up now; it was easier to take a day as it came. Tonight she was going home.
